Scope & Lens

Free guide · Prospecting

The Permissionless Prospecting Playbook

How to create opportunities instead of waiting for them. Four steps, about three and a half hours a week, and a pipeline you can actually switch on.

The problem

Waiting is a strategy. A bad one.

Most agency pipelines run on referrals, intermediaries and inbound. All three share one flaw: none of them are yours. You cannot switch them on in the quarter you need revenue. Feast and famine is not a discipline problem, it is what happens when your pipeline is built from other people's decisions.

Step one · The list

Twenty to thirty named companies.

A

Start where you have already won

Find what your last ten wins had in common. Not the sector, the situation. Then add companies sitting in that same moment.

B

Name a person in each one

A real person, a job title, and a reason they would care. No person means you have an aspiration, not an account.

Step two · The trigger

Something has to have changed.

New marketing lead	Their first ninety days. They need a visible win and rarely trust what they inherited.
Funding or acquisition	Money to spend and a deadline. Brand almost always lags the deal.
Results or a restructure	Someone now owns a number they have to move, with fewer people to move it.
A new competitor	An incumbent suddenly needs a sharper answer to a question they stopped asking.

The short version Pick your companies, watch for something to change, send one useful page with no ask, and keep being useful for as long as it takes.

Step three · The value asset

One page, built for one person.

1 The observation
One thing about their business nobody else has told them.

2 The evidence
One chart or comparison they can believe in four seconds.

3 The implication
What it means commercially if nothing changes.

4 The open door
An easy next step: a reply, a coffee or a call, whichever suits them.

> You are the only one of the five still leading with product features rather than a point of view, and your cost per acquisition has moved the furthest. Chart attached in case it is useful.

What a value asset sounds like. No credentials, no ask.

Step four · Stay useful

Relevant, persistent, for the long run.

Most buyers are not ready yet, so there is no three-email sequence and no break-up email. Keep turning up with something worth receiving until the timing is right.

1 Month 1
Send the value asset. No ask.

2 Month 1
Engage properly with what they post.

3 Month 2
A second piece that builds on the first.

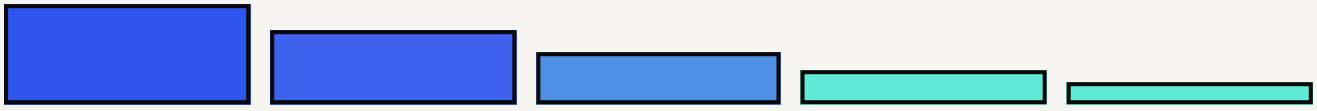

4 Month 3
A useful third-party read, two lines on why.

5 Month 4+
A new trigger, a new asset.

6 Month 6
An invitation: a roundtable, Peers, a coffee.

7 Every quarter
Something worth receiving. Never pad.

Every touchpoint counts. It all trickles down.

Connections
People who know your name

Conversations
Real exchanges, not likes

Meetings
Coffee, calls, events

Opportunities
A brief, a pitch, a project

Revenue
Work you won on purpose

Track all five. Connections become conversations, conversations become meetings, and meetings are where opportunities come from. Just measure the quality too: one relationship you keep adding value to is worth more than a hundred you never speak to again.

Free, and no email wall

Where are your gaps?

Permissionless Healthcheck →
Your score and the three fixes that move it fastest.

Who should I target? →
A short list of organisations that fit you, and who to approach.

How can I be permissionless? →
What to send them, and what to say.